In Delphi, component developers need to do a great deal of work to create a user interface, and it is certainly not unusual to find such a component with an interface that is nothing more than a single form. DelphiStudy and DelphiStudyAdmin complement each other and allow you to create and develop attractive and easy to use administrator and client component applications for Delphi. With DelphiStudy you can customize your component applications to look exactly the way you want, with your own code, using your own design. You can include photos, animation, progress bars, fonts, and more. It is possible to include any number of components, in any order, and be able to manage their visibility. Adding components can be done directly within the program code, and components can be linked to other components, and to code that manages the components they contain. The components and code can be placed in different windows, and even different parts of the same window. Components can be hidden, to increase the space available for other components, and to avoid unwanted tabs on the window. Whether you want to build an extremely complex client component application that includes many windows, forms, and other objects, such as a Windows form that consists of two or more frames, or want to build a typical client application that includes one window only and two forms, DelphiStudyAdmin gives you the ability to create user interfaces that are interesting and attractive. DelphiStudyAdmin includes all the standard components that are available from the Delphi library, and additional components that are intended to provide the functionality of many of the more common components. You can download the components from.
