A clinicopathological study on the differential diagnosis of spindle cell type granular cell tumor and neurilemmoma. Spindle cell type granular cell tumors and neurilemmomas are often confused, but the clinicopathological features of the former are well known. The authors have investigated the clinicopathological features of the spindle cell type granular cell tumors. All spindle cell type granular cell tumors which had been treated in the Department of Oral & Maxillofacial Surgery in Osaka University Hospital from 1963 through 1994 were reviewed. The clinical and pathologic features of these tumors were analyzed statistically. Among 20 spindle cell type granular cell tumors, there were 13 males and 7 females, with ages ranging from 11 to 72 years (median: 42 years). The mandible was involved in 12 cases, the maxilla in 3, the tongue in 2, and the parotid gland in 1. In 10 cases, the tumors were multiple. Of the 20 tumors, 17 were located superficially and 3 deeply, and the mean diameter was 11.4 mm. Of 15 cases with follow-up, 4 recurred, all after treatment with local excision. The tumors had an intrasional bluish-gray color in 13 cases and were red in 3. The mean mitotic figure count was 3.2 per 50 high power fields (HPFs). Immunohistochemically, 14 tumors (70%) were positive for S-100 protein and cytokeratin. Spindle cell type granular cell tumors are more common in males. Histologically, a spindle cell type granular cell tumor may be confused with a neurilemmoma. The pathologist should therefore give an accurate diagnosis and recommend complete surgical excision.
